New Renaissance In Education

Where You Fit In

The key to NRIE's success is the contributions of hundreds of educators, parents, and citizens. YOU are the storehouse of knowledge. YOU are the experts in pedagogy. YOU the keepers of America's heritage that needs to be passed on the next generation. YOU are the concerned parents and citizens with a vested interest in your children's futures. Here's are 8 THINGS YOU CAN DO:

1. PLEDGE right now to contribute a lesson or curriculum within the next year OR to contact at least one educator you know who could contribute lessons or curriculum. Just complete the Pledge Form on the home page.
2. Tell others to visit the NRIE's website (www.nrie.org) and PLEDGE the same.
3. Help build awareness of NRIE and its mission through social networking. Blog about NRIE. Tweet about NRIE. Post about NRIE on Facebook. Talk about NRIE in on-line Forums. E-mail your friends.
4. Visit NRIE's website often to keep updated.
5. Participate in NRIE's Forum. Bring your ideas about what our children should be learning. Tell us about lesson plans and resources that are already available (we don't need to re-invent the wheel). Tell us about great schools and teachers that are already doing their part to prepare the next generation.
6. Invite NRIE to speak at education and other conferences, parent/citizens groups, or suggest conferences and organizations that NRIE should contact.
7. Support our Friends (see "NRIE Friends" link) and/or make use of their resources and offerings.
8. Begin developing curriculum or lessons, based on NRIE's suggested Curriculum Topics or topics you think need to be included. Contact NRIE for help. We need curriculum that explores the philosophies and traditions that informed our Founding Fathers, explains the role of the Constitution in protecting our freedoms and the importance of Rule of Law, explores free market capitalism and its role in ensuring not only our prosperity but also our personal and political freedoms, and teaches the social virtues and culture heritage that has shaped American society such as liberty, justice, hard work, individual responsibility, self-reliance, family, charity, equality of opportunity, unity, tolerance, and temperance, among others.
